 There are a number of US enthusiasts for communicative approaches. The gurus of this movement are Keith Toda, Bob Patrick (for Latin in particular) and Ben Slavic.
 Keith Toda <http://todallycomprehensiblelatin.blogspot.co.uk/> has much to say about CI. Check the tab on CI strategies.
 Bob Patrick <http://www.mygrove.us/for-teachers.html> has ideas about TPRS approaches.
 Ben Slavic <http://www.benslavic.com/> has much to say about TPRS for all languages, not specifically Latin.

Students with Visual Impairment

Large print versions of frequently-used Latin / Classics textbooks are available for students with visual impairments.

Thanks to Lottie Mortimer, who writes:

"Our school has just signed up for the RNIB Bookshare. It's free for schools. Accounts can be made for students with visual impairments and learning difficulties so that they can get a variety of education books online and are able to download them in a variety of different accessible formats. The CLC is available on there. Our SENCO has only just found out about this resource so over the next few weeks I'll experiment with what works.

The CLC, Taylor's Essential Latin GCSE. Latin Stories, GCSE Class Civ Myth & Religion textbook and A Level Greek Theatre/Imperial Image are available. Schools can also request books if they aren't currently available. I don't know how many of the formats are available for each book but this is an amazing resource for making Classics more accessible for students who have additional needs. I'm sure there's a few more Classics teachers out there who would find this very useful."
